Stephanie & Timothy

Stephanie Lynn Langhoff's busy schedule as an independent film producer left her little time to meet new people outside of work. So a colleague recommended Bumble, a dating app in which women make the first connection.

Timothy "Tim" James Ellis, chief marketing officer at Activision, also decided to give Bumble a try after a friend suggested it.

"When you're busy with work and not 25, even 35, anymore, you're not going out as much ... it's harder to meet people," Stephanie said.

Bumble "is a way to communicate before and find out a person's values before meeting them," Tim said. "You get a sense of personality pretty quick."

Tim, a California native, and Stephanie, who is from New Orleans, were both living in Los Angeles at the time, with Stephanie returning to the Crescent City on a regular basis. They chatted on the app for about two weeks before they had their first date: dinner at Lucques, an acclaimed restaurant in West Hollywood.

"Monday night was our first date, and we had scheduled Saturday to go to a music event," Stephanie said. "On Thursday, Tim texted me that he had heard on NPR about a screening of 'Truffant/Hitchcock' that night and would I want to go." Stephanie had other plans but she shifted them. More dates followed.

Nine months later, the couple was on a trip to Europe. After dinner at a restaurant overlooking the Roman Colosseum, they went to the Trevi Fountain. Tim distracted Stephanie with a request to find out more information about the statues, and then he got down on one knee and proposed — with the crowd cheering.

After the engagement, there was no question where to have the wedding. "I am a New Orleans girl, through and through," Stephanie said.
